Kitty Coleman.

BY THE LATE MRS. JUDSON (ANNE FORESTER).

An arrant piece of mischief was that Kitty Coleman, with her deep brown hair and laughing dark eyes of strange things to your heart, and yet looked so innocent all the time, as though nothing but flowers and sunshine were around promptly, and her warm rosy lips, making you think at once of the cream's and strawberries. A pretty jade of soul, he to serve a man that never laughed! Kitty, but her aunt Martha she was always quiet enough, and so demure, the world could not, and still, like the shade of the tyrant moon, pretend to know anything about the matter.

Harry Gay used to quiet Squire Bodkin's cows, and to help him to hay, and was very thick with the squire and Aunt Martha, while Kitty, a great black creature with long horns, and a bell as big as a pumpkin, would look at him. What could half a stranger, and vexatious, and yet so fascinating, do? Harry had some pretext for breaking off the match. The princess married the boorish servant, married the boor, and proved herself one of the most devotedly loving wives in her time.

In Cromwell's time, it is asserted that even the spiritual court of Charles, the second only sent three thirty shilling fines to the Scilly Isles, and universally sought Frances Jennings most earnestly wished to marry Jermyn, a man of no fortune and of indifferent character, were found in the arms of each other at the court of Whitehall, and the lady proclaimed that she would follow her husband to the Scilly Isles, and share his exile with him. Then all of a sudden she recalled both decisions at once, and declared that she never would go to sea—never; and, making her address in her most approved dear-Lucy style, intimated on being taken home as ours.

Harry Gay was not a native of our village; he came from one the eastern cities to spend a summer there; and Aunt Martha said he was too well bred to have any patience with the boyish manners of her romping niece. But Kitty insisted that her manners were not boyish enough; and if her heart overflowed, it was not her fault, she could not shut up all the glad feelings within her; they would leap back to the cell of her kindred, gushing from other bosoms, and to all the beautiful things of creation, as joyous in their mute eloquence as she was. Besides, the wicked little Kitty Coleman was always angry that Aunt Martha should attempt to govern her cousin by the likings of Harry Gay; she would not be dictated to by him, even though his opinions were the assertion of her infallible aunt. But the lady made a trifling mistake in the subject matter of his interference. He did not slander her, and always warned the theme of her follies when he could. And Martha introduced, indeed, her errors were heard to speak of the ladie, for the presence he wrote she was loyal, that she was Kitty Coleman's remark which was only five minutes in reaching its object. But Kitty Coleman, though very successful in captivating woman's hearts than Jno. Wilkes and yet his portrait is even of right, and his real face must have been hideous. Rogers speaks of his "diabolical spirit."

Originally successful in the sans way was Marabeau. And he, too was a man utterly devoid of any pretension to personal beauty. In spite of himself to a lady, he deserves his appearance as that a tiger who has tasted human blood! George the First or Second of England, had a daughter who, in the records of antiquity was introduced to accommodations. When this prince came to London to marry her, he was found to be so much smaller only that the king told his daughter he could not put her to marry him, and upon that date, he would have found some pretext for breaking off the match. The princess married the deformed

☞ We have made such arrangements, that we can furnish the Atlantic Monthly and the Republican to new subscribers, for $3.25. The Atlantic Monthly is an excellent magazine, published at Boston, and comes at $3.00 per single copy, one year. Persons wishing to subscribe, can see specimens by calling at our office.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—We repeat, for the last time, that we will publish no communication unless we know the name of the author. We shall be exceedingly pleased to receive communications, and especially of local interest, from persons throughout the county, but we want the names of the authors. It is not our intention to disclose names of communicants, and those who do not want their names known, will do them a favor by not letting us know them. If, however, if we are at any time without the name of a writer, we will pay no attention to them.

☞ Read our ad. Wm. Hess, Dentist, is about to remove from Freeport, and will sell out his entire stock of Furniture at cost and all bad debts. He has been located here for a number of years, and is a good workman. Read his advertisement.

☞ We call attention to the fact that we still have on hand, a good assortment of Blanks of different kinds, which we are prepared to sell cheap.

No. 7 Ant. Rhony.—We call attention to Jacobs & Petit's advertisement. It will be seen that they have on hand an excellent assortment of Dry Goods and Groceries. Patronize them.

☞ Our School Commissioner publishes a notice, this week, stating the time and place, at which he will hold meetings for the examination of teachers. Read it.

We take the liberty of returning the thanks of the citizens of our town to those philanthropic gentlemen, for their successful efforts in securing several cisterns, at several places, in the streets.

☞ Circuit Court will be in session next week, and things that time we want to see a large number of persons in town. We live in hope that many of them will have plenty of the "chinks," or they will not fail to "remember the Editor."

Last Sunday morning, about 2 o'clock, an alarm of fire was started, and a number of the citizens turned out, and that the Malt House belonging to Russell Mills, Esq., was on fire. The alarm was a false one. The hard working citizens were cold in using their hose, as the fire was a complete failure. No damage done, not even a rat killed, and some grain was damaged.

EXHIBITION.—The Mt. Carroll Literary and Thespian Society will give another exhibition next Monday evening. On that occasion the society will perform a drama, in five acts, entitled "The Brookland, or The Fallen Saved," which, for its moral bearing, cannot be surpassed by any play that ever was written. The large number who, we understand, have been successfully trying to witness that play, can have an opportunity on next Monday evening.

☞ There are over 500 students attending the Union School, and seven teachers, including the teachers of music and music are employed. We understand that there is to be an examination of the classes held, about the 1st of April. Among the older studies of the school, there has been a literary society (composed of both sexes) formed, which has not, here-to-fore, been mentioned in the columns of the Republican. The object of the society is the cultivation of different

MANEY'S REAPER.—The attention of our readers is called to the advertisement, in another column, of Maney's Reaper. That Reaper is too well known, to our readers, for us to make any comments. It will be seen that the price has been reduced. Mr. H. H. Taylor, who advertises them for sale, will be found, by all who trade with him, to be a perfect gentleman, and a thorough business man. He has on hand a splendid assortment of farming implements. Our farmers will find it to their interest to trade there.

SAVANNA, March 9, 1858.

Constable paid me a visit to-day, last Tuesday morning while I was eating breakfast. Came blustering in—said my company was solicited to attend court, instanter—concluded I was a "goose catcher." Summons called for me as a witness—felt better. Finished my breakfast and rode to Carroll. Sat in the court room all day, listening to the lawyers, the principal part of the time, squabbling with each other as to what was and what was not law.

Rode home through storm after night to return again next morning—went through about the same exercises as day before, until about 4 P. M., when Judge Caton arrived. Finally told all I knew about the case, which was not much, rode home after night, intending to go to Chicago next day—concluded to attend Lodge meeting instead—rode an extra horse Tuesday, and had a good (as per usual) time.

A donation party came off at the house of Rev. W. B. Brown, on Tuesday last, for his benefit. Some two score were present.

Sunday last, between Hall and Carroll, an old lady, by the name of Sayers, had all of her clothing consumed by fire, and all of her household goods, except what she had on her person. Her husband was away from home at the time. Some of the neighbors discovered the fire, and succeeded in saving the old lady's life, but could not save her property. Subscription paper is now being circulated for her benefit.

Another old lady, by the name of Sayers, died on Saturday last, and was buried on Sunday. Her husband was away from home at the time of her death.

Rode from Savanna to Carroll, on Monday morning, and found the roads very bad. Some of the mud holes were almost impassable. Rode from Carroll to Savanna, on Tuesday, and found the roads much better. Those Girls at the Dolphin

The town of Guilford, in Surrey, is one of the most romantic, characteristic, and singular throughout the country. Its origin is of ancient date, for some of the buildings are of the Anglo-Saxon Kings, the ruins of whose Castle are still to be seen on the adjacent hill, while many of the old fashioned buildings, some of which, in former times, were residences of people of high rank, are now used for common uses, but are now residences of tradesmen, or are converted into lodging never contemplated in their erection.

Among these is the Dolphin Inn, a large old fashioned looking edifice, with a somewhat modernized front, but, the back of which remains, as it did 3 years ago, in the center of the building there is an arch—a right of way sufficient if wide to call carriages through, leading to a large paved inner court, as well as another and paved yard at the front. This was much frequented by travelers.

So was the Dolphin.

But there are two reasons for the Dolphin's being more frequented than it otherwise would be, which I shall now proceed to explain.

The first reason why the Dolphin became more frequented than other houses of the same class, was because it was kept by a man named Jarman, a widower, who had one daughter, a girl of about seventeen, and two servant girls, called by courtesy, barmaids.

Jarman was a jolly, fat, good-natured fellow, who was always ready to crack a joke with his customers, and who was very fond of his daughter, Mary, who was a pretty, modest, and well behaved girl, who, although she was not a beauty, was very attractive in her appearance, and who, from her manner, was winning in their ways, so that she was liked by all who knew her, and, indeed, that they were the case of all who visited the house, and were ever welcome.

This was the reason why the Dolphin became more frequented than other houses of the same class, and why it was called the Dolphin.

The second reason why it became more frequented than other houses of the same class, and why it went by the name of the Dolphin.

The second reason why it became more frequented than other houses of the same class, and why it went by the name of the Dolphin, was because the barmaids were pretty girls, and that, of course, they had their admirers, as pretty girls always have, and these admirers, as a matter of course, frequented the house in order to see the girls, and to talk with them, and to smile upon them, and to be smiled upon by them, and to pay them attentions, and to make love to them, and to be made love to by them, and to flirt with them, and to be flirted with by them, and to do all those things which people do when they are in love, or when they are not in love, but only pretend to be in love, which is the case with nine-tenths of the people who are in love, or who pretend to be in love, and who think they are in love, but who
